I must question the credibility and reliability of the horticultural reports and any assurances given by the developers regarding public safety. The developers of this property have again let their garden trees spill over the public footpath in Pilgrim's Lane with very dense, very low branches, and vicious spikes at eye level, which force pedestrians, including mothers with prams, into the road. The developers only cut back similar growth a year or so ago after pressure from Camden Council. It is now even worse. So what price any assurances the developers give on tree care and public safety during the extensive work they plan? I attach three very recent photos.
