To whomsoever would read - public concerns re: town development:

I urge you to resist adding to the demise of London with yet more ugly, sunlight-stealing blocks of unhappiness. Whilst 'progress' is always to be approached with consideration, City planning in most towns has been overshadowed by greed. Whilst some tall buildings have been erected with some careful evaluation of their impact on the environment and its inhabitants, many have considered little beyond self-satisfying egos and personal financial gain.

Please consider carefully the long-term impact the developments may have all-round.

Living in the dark is unattractive. We all need sunlight to survive intact.

With kind regards
Angela Warren
