'Processionary moth' was mentioned as a 'concern'. Is there a problem at present with this? If so, could evidence of that be provided? I think the reasons provided for felling the trees are weak and insubstantial. If 'overshadowing' really is a problem, could not the tree be pruned or cut back somewhat? In my view there are far too many trees being felled in this and other nearby conservation areas for reasons that are invalid or very weak. More consideration needs to be given to felling trees vis-a-vis the environmental and habitat-loss impacts such felling leads to.
