It is a unique venue in North London providing a space for creatives and musicians who don't fit into the box of the gentrification of London. There are very few venues left like it in London let alone Camden. To see it close down would be a travesty.

It also plays an integral role in organising the annual Alma Street community fair. I have lived the street along from the cafe for close to 10 years and have never found the noise to be disturbing. It is a welcoming spot for residents of all ages and would be a major loss for the local community if it was forced to shut after all these years because it couldn't operate on hours that make it financially viable to run. The combination of everything that Map offers is unique and it is rare to find somewhere that is loved by so many different members of the community.
