The above redevelopment involve the closure of Triyoga club which would be very disadvantageous for primrose hill community as providing activities for people of different age groups including babies and pregnant ladies. In addition Triypga is quite popular among no Primrose Hill locals leading to an increase of business for the community. For example I got to know the are as I started coming to the yoga centre and I eventually decided to move and buy my first property in Primrose Hill

I am a yoga teacher and therapeutic bodyworker. I have worked at triyoga for 4 years.

During my tenure at triyoga, I have seen countless residents of the Primrose Hill community come through the doors and have their lives improved - not only in terms of physical health, but in terms of mental and emotional health as well.

triyoga offers a unique community focused atmosphere that encourages friendships that cut across socioeconomic and age backgrounds. There is nothing of it's kind elsewhere in London, and as such Primrose Hill is enviable in this respect. Where else does community get fostered on this scale, almost every single day of the year, in an entirely secular yet life-affirming environment? I have been a Londoner for twenty years, and I know nothing of it's kind anywhere else.

The loss of a centre at Erskine Road is not just a loss for Primrose Hill, however. It is a loss for all of London, as people from all over London gather to engage in this unique community. Of course, all of the local businesses benefit from this tremendous influx of people who would otherwise have no reason to eat, shop, and socialise in this neighborhood.

It strikes me that approving measures that would mean the end of triyoga in Erskine Road would be entirely against the Council's mandate to protect and steward local communities and local commerce in such a way that Camden's neighborhoods retain their best aspects, and local residents and business owners continue to enjoy their proximity to truly distinctive, inspiring, and overall beneficial ventures such as triyoga.

I am the Company Director & Shopkeeper of PRESS, 3 Erskine Road.
The Leeder House redevelopment could cause devastating disruption.
There is obviously a link between the same Landlord owns Leeder House, & evicting Triyoga.
As local people shop increasingly shop online, Triyoga is a magnet to draw them out into the streets.
The footflow missed by the eviction of Triyoga is obviously not OK.
The community is working together with local MP's, newspapers, celebrities & yourselves, to save Triyoga.
So I object to Leeder house redevelopment, despite my warm welcome to new neighbours usually.

I operate as a therapist at Triyoga and have done for the past 7 years. It is with great regret that this building is now under threat. The centre is a landmark within the Primrosr Hill community and acts as a great space for people to not only enjoy their personal activities but also as somewhere to socially gather. Even when I moved to Isleworth I still commute to this area as it really has such a great environment to both work and for the clients. It has international acclaim in terms of the services it offers and is part of London social scene. It's wrong to erase this and I fully oppose the planning application.

Yours faithfully
Miss A Anderson

Tri yoga has been an integral part of the community for the past 14 years i have taught there since the beginning and seem what it has done not just for the individuals that come but the whole community of primrose most of my students have moved to the area solely to be nearer Triyoga.
as i resident of primrose hill and a teacher i hope you will please help us to fight this there are somethings in london that are important building that need to stay as they are for the community. thank you for your time
