Description and Sources

Description

An archaeological desk based assessment was undertaken in 2001 by CgMs Consulting at the site Rolls House, Arnold House and Breams Buildings. The consultant concluded that the likelihood of prehistoric remains surviving is low, and the chance for Roman remains is low to moderate. The chance of Saxon evidence surviving is also low, and the potential of the site is primarily focussed on the medieval and post medieval periods, as settlement occurred from the 13th century onwards. However, the construction of basemented buildings on the site in the 1880s and 1960s is likely to have caused truncation and destruction of the archaeological deposits and only the deepest cut features may survive.

Description and Sources

Description

Fourteen testpits were recorded by the Museum of London Archaeology Service. The earliest archaeological deposit was a leached soil horizon dated provisionally to the thirteenth century, into which a curvi-linear enclosure ditch was dug. The enclosure was sealed by a worked soil horizon dated to the fourteenth century. A medieval ditch oriented SW-NE that bisected the site is interpreted as a boundary marker or drainage channel associated with the 'little lane' that is referred to in late medieval documents describing the holdings of the priory. This lane was known subsequently as Pissing Alley. A number of buildings with masonry foundations were constructed in the east part of the site in the early post-medieval period. One of the buildings was cellared, and another was supplied with a chalk-lined cesspit. One of these buildings was modified in the sixteenth century by the addition of a brick-built cellar. In the sixteenth century a new building with brick foundations was constructed in the centre of the site. It was fitted with fireplace mouldings that were probably salvaged from the priory of St John. The building was subsequently modified by the addition of a cellar and was further modified over the centuries until its destruction in the nineteenth century. In the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries the medieval buildings in the east part of the site were replaced by a terrace of brick buildings with cellars, fronting onto St John Street.

Description

Four testpits measuring 2m x 2m were excavated by the Museum of London Archaeology Service at 120 Aldersgate Street, London, EC1, between the 16th and 22nd Dec 1999. This was prior to the construction of a four storey building and landscaping of the courtyard. The test pits revealed extensive modern concrete foundations, to a depth of at least 16.35m OD, which had destroyed any archaeological deposits that may have been present. One testpit was abandoned due to the presence of a concrete beam. Another was located at the deep end of the existing swimming pool and revealed a late medieval/early post-medieval deposit. This overlay what appeared to be a natural gravel. No deposits earlier than medieval were encountered.

Description and Sources

Description

An Archaeological watching brief was carried out by MoLAS at St John of Jerusalem, Clerkenwell, EC1, between the 18th July and 1st August 2000. The main work to be carried out was the removal of an old floor from the crypt and its replacement with a more permeable version. Four trial pits were excavated before work on relaying the crypt floor; these established that the floor would not unduly disturb archaeological remains. The central knave of the crypt was founded directly onto natural gravels without foundations. This may explain a ledge around the base of the knave wall as spread footings, an alternative explanation to an attractive theory that the ledge acted as a bench in an early form of chapter house. The south bay of the church was shown to be built over dark fill and this may relate to an expansion in the twelfth century from a smaller Norman Church. The south wall of the church cut through this fill. No features earlier than the medieval period were encountered.

Description

An archaeological evaluation was carried out by AOC at 3-7 Herbal Hill, Islington, between the 21st and 27th Nov 2001. The proposed scheme of development is for a four storey building with a four storey T-shaped return to the rear and two basements. Two testpits were investigated and excavated to a depth of 3.5m . Channel edge silts, probably of the former River Fleet were sealed by deep deposits of seventeenth-eighteenth century made ground which was in turn overlain and truncated by nineteenth and twentieth century construction. No archaeological material earlier than post-medieval was encountered.

A watching brief was undertaken at Ray House, St Andrew Street, by the Museum of London Archaeology Service in April 1998. There were no archaeological deposits present on the site. The basement slab to the standing building had truncated any archaeological remains which may have formerly overlain the London Clay.

*The truncated surface of London Clay immediately underlay the slab at 10.73m OD.*

Description

An archaeological watching brief was carried out in 2002 by the Museum of London Archaeology Service. No archaeological deposits or structures were observed. The deposits that were seen are all part of the natural geological sequence common to this area. It is assumed that the construction of the basement for the existing building has removed all archaeological remains.

Description and Sources

Description

An archaeological evaluation was carried out on the site of the Horder Wing, St Bartholomew's Hospital, by the Museum of London Archaeology Service in 1999. Archaeological features identified consisted of: Roman consolidation of the truncated natural ground; medieval external soils; alluvial material within the medieval City ditch; possible Tudor masonry which may be associated with the route between St Bartholomew's Hospital and the Postern Gate into Christ's Hospital; 18th century building remains; and a 19th century brick lined soakaway. No evidence for burials was found.

*Natural brickearth and clay mixed with pebble and coarse sand all truncated at between 14.58 m OD and 13.18 m OD.*

Description and Sources

Description

An archaeological watching brief was carried out by the Department of Urban Archaeology in 1980. Details of the Wren church were recorded when the turf inside the church (now an open space) was stripped: floors, pier bases, a brick vault containing lead coffins, other brick vaults and a pulpit base. Finds included medieval moulded stonework from the pre-Great Fire Greyfriars church and fragments of the font of the Wren church.

Description

The excavation of service trenches, lift pits and ground reduction for the formation of new floor slabs was monitored by the Museum of London Archaeology Service. No archaeological deposits survived. The slabs and foundations of the basement had truncated the site down to floodplain gravels. These were truncated at 13.75m OD - 14.43m OD.

Description and Sources

Description

Archaeological monitoring of five geotechnical pits was carried out by MoLAS between the 18th and 20th February and 23rd and 25th March 1998 at Evangelist House. The pits were dug to examine the existing perimeter wall of the site and upper geological levels. The maximum depth was c. 2m. Some residual Roman building material was recovered, but it is unclear what building this material is derived from and where it was located. A series of massive Medieval quarry pits for sand and gravel extraction were found and these appear to have been backfilled in the late 12th to late 13th c. Post- medieval brick walls, cellars and footings indicate the development of the site from the 17th c to the present day.

Description and Sources

Description

An archaeological evaluation was carried out in 1998 by the Museum of London Archaeology Service. Site code CWL98.

At the western edge and northern side of the site a large rubbish pit and a series of dump deposits of 14th century date cut or overlay the natural sand; the latter may possibly have been fills of sand or gravel extraction pits. In the centre of the site extensive 14th or 15th century dumped deposits were succeeded by late 17th and 18th century rubbish pits. Brick foundations for several buildings, dating to the 18th century, and possibly an associated yard surface, were recorded in the centre and northern end of the site; these were probably part of documented buildings fronting onto Great Sutton Street. Modern basements then truncated the site.

Description and Sources

Description

A small area of natural brickearth in the south-east corner of the site had fragile rotted human-sized bone in a small cut feature filled with brickearth. The bone was approximately the size of a human femur or humerus and lay horizontally. Unfortunately, it was so fragile it disintegrated during excavation. It may have been a remnant of a Roman burial. Reworked brickearth with Roman tile may also indicate Roman activity, possibly connected with the cemetery, which is thought to have operated throughout the Roman period in this area. Alternatively, the Roman tile could be residual and the deposit from a much later cut feature. There were post-medieval quarries penetrating Terrace Gravels at the north Dan west perimeters of the site.

Description and Sources

Description

Among the principal structures was a timber river wall which reinforced the north bank of the Thames. the revetment is believed to be associated with the establishment of the White Friars precinct in 1241. this structure is presumed to have continued in use until a stone river wall was constructed. Historical research suggest s that the stone wall was built in or soon after 1349. The second waterfront was itself replaced by the construction of a new stone wall approximately 40m further to the south. Landfill/levelling layers associated with the earliest (timber) wall were excavated as they were located beyond the limits of the trenches.

Late Medieval and early Post Medieval garden soil type deposits were encountered in the two largest areas exposed. These soils probably formed as a result of an extended period of horticultural activity following the reclamation of the area from the Thames. A large timber-framed building was constructed on the east of the site in the 16th century, it probably continued in use throughout the 17th and 18th centuries. Extensive evidence of 18th century building was found to the west of this earlier structure. A complex of interconnected brick-built structures, which clearly did not for part of a dwelling, were recorded in the central area of the site. These are believed to form part of an 18th century distillery shown on Rocque's map of 1746. The distillery complex continued in use until the early 19th century.

Description and Sources

Description

Two geotechnical pits and two boreholes were monitored by the Museum of London Archaeology Service. The first pit was 1m square and situated in the light well east of the Hall's kitchens and it was found that the hall was built into loose ash representing domestic waste. The second was on the terrace next to the eastern retaining, 1.6m by 0.6m. below the made ground was the same ashy deposit, along with oyster shell and pig bones. The boreholes were on the south and north ends of the terrace in which the ash was again encountered. This was probably part of a dump that was reworked to create the terrace. No features or finds earlier than possibly medieval were encountered.

Description and Sources

Description

Ground preparation for piling was observed by the Museum of London Archaeology Service. A large medieval quarry pit truncated by modern structures contained a sherd of a Coarse border-ware table jug. A late seventeenth or early eighteenth century cellar wall, for the property to the north of the site (136 saffron hill) was exposed on its south side. A brick drain of similar date ran beneath 138-140 Saffron Hill. No finds or features of a date earlier than medieval were encountered.

Description and Sources

Description

An evaluation consisting of seven trenches was undertaken by the Museum of London Archaeology Service at King Edwards Buildings in 1992. In 1998-9 a series of pile caps and shafts were excavated in advance of piling and others were monitored. The Roman city wall was surveyed in 1998. A large open area, a number of ground beam trenches and pile caps and shafts in King Edward's Buildings, sewer-heading trenches under Giltspur Street, Newgate Street and King Edward Street and three more trenches at Christ Church Greyfriars were excavated in 1999-2000. Six trenches were opened in Christ Church Greyfriars in 1998. The foundations of Christ Church were evaluated in 1999. In 2000, seven test pits were dug through the road surfaces of King Edward Street, Newgate Street and Warwick Lane. A bastion on the Roman wall was filled in in 2000. A lift pit was excavated in the basement of 114 Newgate Street in 2001. Four trenches were excavated and monitored at Greyfriars in 2001. All this work was carried out by the Museum of London Archaeology Service. Three site codes were amalgamated into KEW98 (KEB92 and GCC98).

Prehistoric stream channels were encountered, and residual worked flints dated to the Late Neolithic or Early Bronze Age. Remains of early Roman buildings were found. The Roman wall and Silchester Road bisected the site. Saxo-Norman activity was identified in the form of lined pits and an early city ditch, dated 1000-1200 with later recuttings. A bastion was added to the Roman wall c. 1230-1300. A fragment of Greyfriars Friary was recovered, from the 1306-1327 rebuild. The city ditch was backfilled in the fifteenth century and provided new living space in the post-medieval period. The Great Fire destroyed many buildings. The ruins of Wren's Christ Church Greyfriars are preserved on site. Later redevelopment included the Giltspur Street Compter prison, built in 1787 whose foundations were investigated.

Description

Two test pits were investigated and one was abandoned by Pre-Construct Archaeology. Test pit 1 revealed a sequence of stratified archaeological deposits. Early medieval dump layers were truncated by a linear cut feature of late-medieval origin, which in turn was overlaid by post-medieval dumped deposits. Test pit 2 was abandoned and test pit 3 revealed no significant deposits. No finds or features earlier than medieval in date were encountered.

Description

Two test pits were excavated on 15 and 16 Dec 1997 and two further test pits from 7 to 16 Jan 1998. Seventeen geotechnical test pits and three test pits were observed between March and April 1998. An open area (1) excavation was undertaken from 15 Feb to 26 March 1999. A second area excavation was undertaken from 24 March to 15 April 1999. Two test pits were investigated in area 3 between 28 March and 16 April 1999. A watching brief was carried out within area 3 between 26 Jan and 11 Feb 2000. Roman occupation in the form of pits, a well and occasional fragments of pottery were found. By the fourteenth century AD the land had been purchased for development and large quarry pits were opened and backfilled. In the fourteenth to fifteenth centuries one building was constructed. New buildings were constructed in the seventeenth century. A large eighteenth century cess pit was found at the eastern end of the site. No finds or features earlier than Roman in date were encountered.

Description and Sources

Description

A watching brief to log the contents of seventeen machine excavated geotechnical pits and to monitor ground reductions across the development were carried out by the Museum of London Archaeology Service. Almost all archaeological deposits had been truncated during the twentieth century across most of the site, but there were pockets of in situ archaeology surviving beneath a site' wide dump of rubble demolition debris. the fragmentary deposits were immediately above the gravel and probably represent the remains of external dumps or truncated pit fills of medieval and post-medieval date. the only datable finds were four sherds of sixteenth century and fourteenth century pottery. the outline of a north-south medieval chalk foundation was seen on the north side of the site. A short length of a late post-medieval culverted brick drain was also seen. No finds or features dated earlier than the medieval period were encountered.
