

Architrave section moulding

to be fitted 9th April 2000.

Above: Drawn out template take from neighbouring house

Below 1:1 drawing of moulding

Exceptionally wide sash window (approximately 2m wide) in a pub in Bromyard, Herefordshire, England

Westover Plantation, an example of Georgian architecture on the eastern James River, in Virginia.
Georgian architecture is the name given in most English-speaking countries to the set of architectural styles current between 1720 and 1840.
It is eponymous for the first four British monarchs of the House of Hanover—George I of Great Britain, George II of Great Britain, George III of the United Kingdom, and George IV of the United Kingdom—who reigned in continuous succession from August 1714 to June 1830.

A Georgian house in Salisbury
House at 57 The Close, Salisbury, England.

Most of the houses within the Cathedral Close are associated with the Cathedral.
This one looks like an archetypal Georgian House, although the dormer windows in the roof are probably a later addition.

