Maybe they're getting mugged from the kerb to their house. May be they're just trying to increase the value of their property. Looking at the works going on at the property, I would suggest the latter. Loss of parking facility in associated bay a big problem. Very congested in that area; each parking space counts. People tend to park in the bays when it suits them even though they have off street parking. Why do people have off street parking as well as Residents' Parking Permits? I was going to suggest banning both, but then I figured you wouldn't approve because of loss of revenue. So, new idea, if they want off street parking as well as Residents' Parking Permits, charge them double the going rate for the permit (including existing situations). There you go, everyone will now think you're a genius. Signed: mildly perturbed of Goldhurst Terrace
