

Also to add....

If the proposed developments do go ahead, has anyone thought about the livelihoods of the marketers and whether provisions will be made for them and their families?

Very sad and unfortunate for those who need the business to avoid being homeless.

> I have been forced to write you this email as I wish to voice my reasons as to why you should not plan on removing the marketers who currently work there.

> Firstly, Camden Lock is a magnet for tourists, it's different to your usual shopping malls and has variety of goods which is fuelled by the marketers. Allowing the big businesses to remove the ones who need the business the most is ludicrous. We have enough of the cloned chain shops. Everywhere you go, there is a Next, Peacocks, BHS, M&S etc....., I personally go to Camden to escape this, and many others do too.

> You would be making a big mistake! It's wrong to lose the uniqueness and the heritage of Camden.

>

> I know that my words won't mean a thing as it all comes down to money and what best benefits yourselves. I on the other hand look at the history and marketers, not everything should have a price tag. It's like selling off your grandmothers sentimental ring which has been passed through generations.

>

> I feel very emotional about this as Camden will not be Camden without the marketers and the current ambiance. Shame to lose something so priceless.

>

> I hope you will see things from a different but yet popular perspective.

>

> Yours faithfully
