YOUR COMMENTS ON THE CASE

Kilburn High Road has far too many betting shops and bookies already. Many of these attract anti-social behaviour and lead to police wasting their time and resources having to deal with the aftermath. The police are paid for by local residents. Most betting companies do not pay tax in the UK. Apart increasing policing and insurance costs (for local residents and businesses), opening another betting shop is just likely to increase hardship to locals living on some of the neighbouring housing estates who are already finding it hard to make ends meet. Could I suggest, that Brent and Camden Council release how many incidents the police have attended relating to local betting shops on Kilburn High Road in 2015 and publish how much this has cost the public in additional and unnecessary council tax.
