Dear Rob,

George Martin died today. He was unique and brought colour and enjoyment to millions. His most important legacy, beyond the Beatles, was the creation of Air Studios in Hampstead, a place crucial to the British Music Industry and the business of making quality sound recordings for albums and films.

New York had a vibrant recording scene. Unfortunately all the facilities were in prime property locations - and now - the passion for property has decimated the studio business there, and as a consequence there is no large scale recording facility capable of recording an orchestra. No one records soundtracks there and the orchestral scene is a shadow of it's former self.

IF THERE ARE NO FACILITIES PEOPLE MOVE ELSEWHERE, CREATE NEW HABITS, AND DON'T COME BACK.

Regarding the planning applications for basement rooms - there is no guarantee they can make that it will not structurally damage Air Studios and the buildings around it.

Air Studios would not be able to run it's business and much work would return to America or create new habits in central Europs.

Please object to this applicaton.

Yours Sincerely - Jonathan Allen
