2016/0254/P	DAVID WHEELER	105 KINGS CROSS ROAD CAMDEN LONDON	03/04/2016 13:06:59 INT		If i am not mistaken is there not an ongoing dispute over a previous planning application on this property. The owner applied for planning permission to convert the upper two floors to two self contained flats but instead covered it to four self contained units. The council ruling if i remember was that he must conform to the original planning application, something i can assure you he did not do it is still two self contained units. As to the current application the rear 1st floor extension will be built over a previous ground floor extension but the walls on both sides of that extension are just garden boundary walls and therefore would not have sufficient foundations to support a first floor extension. Any collapse if built without strengthening the foundations could be very dangerous as at the rear of the building the Thames link railway line is open to the open air because the original tunnel needed venting when first built. A collapse of a building onto that line could result in a tragic and fatal railway accident.
