2016/1012/P	Michael Fazzina	116A Heath Street London NW3 1DR	09/04/2016 13:40:54	COMMNT	After seeing the plans on the website it does not show details whether the extension will be looking like part of the existing conservatory. It does not describe how the beams for the roofing will be done. It does not state if the coping stones are an identical height to the internal flooring or ceiling. The coping stones would be 12 inches around. See original planning application for conservatory. We don't want to have the extension of the conservatory looking like a secondary building. The owner of the lease is in breach of the lease he has collected money for damp proofing and not carried it out. He has also omitted to pay his due to the building insurance. In my experience once planning permission has been requested by someone in breach of contract or default, the Council should not consider it until the matter has been clarified. We have contacted Mr Rahul the lessee but he refuses to communicate. Therefore I as landlord and the first person to give the ok to any building work in 116 Heath Street apart from planning permission I object to this application until full details are presented and the landlord has been formally advised. We have photos of the construction of the conservatory from the beginning showing details and size of the beams if these are required.
