I have lived here for nearly 20 years and as my child grew up there were similar applications which were wisely rejected by Camden. It is a residential block, a pleasing landmark in itself when seen from all sides, especially when walking from the stations. If its roofline were to be festooned with multiple engineering installations, this would ruin it. From my own front window, at present there are two discreetly placed home satellite dishes, which have no visual impact. In addition, the safety factors have not been proved yet, and many of us (particularly with growing children) are fearful of the unseen harm which could be brought to growing brains (and older ones !). This long established residential community should not be subjected to possible harm, to any electrical interference which may result, nor should the roofline be blighted by such ugly commercial equipment for the financial benefit of others, far away.
