

Hi Rob, my name is Jordan Laughlin. I work in sound post production as an engineer in London and am a London resident. Any work that is carried out to create a basement extension next to Air studios will disrupt their ability to record music and therefore operate as a business. Even the hint of this plan going ahead may mean they loose future bookings because productions can not risk their recording sessions being cancelled or sabotaged by building work.

Air Studios has been a pillar of excellence in music and music for film for decades now and will hopefully remain to do so.

It's unique location, structure and workforce are what make it a special recording spot for pop and orchestral arrangements rivalling all other studios worldwide.

I have had the pleasure of spending time at Air and been on the receiving end of music sent from there to use in TV and Film and can not express my sadness that it may close down because of and unnecessary residential luxury.

The British Film Industry heavily supports the economy and never more so than now. By saving Air you will not only be doing your bit for the workforce but will help the economy thrive rather than helping the few local residents who seem to have enough.

Please 'Save Air Studios'.

Thanks,
Jordan Laughlin
