These were noted as such in the tree report from the planning application which was previously approved. They should not be removed for this reason. The front boundary treatment was noted as being retained in the same planning application. If these are cut down and stumps ground, then can there be any replacement green boundary? These seem natural to the local setting where bushes are used to create a boundary between a private property and the public side walk. Without knowing the intent of the boundary, it should be denied removal until such time.
