Thank you.

We are worried about a couple of issues given the age and history of the properties:

1. The garden wall that divides our property and their property and how they will reinforce this? Are the builders and structural engineers confident that the garden wall will not collapse or bow? We were going to excavate our own garden only to find after a trial pit that clay and solid concrete was beneath and decided against it as our builders were not able to advice what the potential consequences were
2. The actual party (house) wall where the double width extension is going to be built -the same issues above.

Kind regards

Karina
