2018/3375/P	Claire Leveson	06/09/2018 15:57:29	INT	Given that I made planning applications last year for a much more modest extension to my property [REDACTED] - and was rejected on the grounds of it being a conservation area - I would feel I had grounds for grievance if planning was approved here. Not least because as I understand it the existing roof terrace was constructed without planning permission - I would have loved to build one on my house but wasn't allowed to - so it would feel like a reward for not following the same rules that everyone else has to if permission was granted now. However if permission is granted then I would argue that has to set a precedent so that everyone on this side of the street has the right to successfully apply to construct an additional floor on the top of our houses - as I would intend to.
