The Property:

Boston House is part of a symmetrical terrace of eight houses on the south side of Fitzroy Square. It was built in the late 1700 by celebrated architects Robert and James Adam and was rebuilt in 1946-1948 as a result of bombing damage during the Second World War.

Fitzroy Square itself was a speculative development by the 1st Baron Southampton in order to provide London homes for aristocratic families and was built in four stages. The subject property as well as all the other properties on the terrace are fronted in Portland Stone which was brought in by sea and up the Thames from Dorset.
