Thank you David.

I've zoomed into the image "with tower" and I think the view is more damaged than before with the completely redesign of the building. Screenshot below. We know from the experience of the view from Richmond Park's King Henry's Mound that long views can be damaged. That tower was over 20km from the viewpoint, this is much closer.

Best,

Slaney

Hi David,

Would it be possible to have a response to this email for tonight's forum meeting David?
Residents will want to know whether they have to spend their holiday responding to planning applications.

Many thanks,
Slaney

Dear David,

I see that there is an application in today to make the invisible Brill Place tower less transparent.

Can I ask that the deadline is extended from 30 December as many people will be away between Christmas and New Year.

I've not had time to read all the documents but, from memory, the British Library viewpoint was chosen so the tower was masked by the library gate. I think at committee it was agreed the tower would be visible above the library if a view just east of that used was chosen. Could we see that view with the new design?

Also, I think a hi-res digital of the view from Regent's Park was provided. As the new design will be less transparent, could we have a hi-res please? The low-res in the study makes it obvious that the damage to the view across Chester Terrace will be increased.

I see that the number of flats being provided is being dramatically increased although the building envelope remains the same. How does this impact the viability assessment? Are some of the additional homes to be affordable?

Best,

Slaney
