Dear Kate

We've been having technical discussions with the services consultant on this project and they've suggested that omitting the air-conditioning system could have a bearing on the specification for the air source heat pumps, given that they were designed to operate as part of a co-ordinated and integrated house heating / cooling system.

Accordingly, we would like to omit the air source heat pumps from this application as we do not know whether the system that has been designed would still be feasible until further technical analysis has been carried out.

We trust this is acceptable.

King regards
