Oakford Court, a 1955 block of four privately owned flats, directly overlooks (on the side on which there are many windows) the rear garden of 28, Parliament Hill. I have owned and occupied the top floor flat since 1992. I know the other occupants of Oakford Court share my opinion, that the apple tree in question is a beautiful and totally inoffensive component of the view we enjoy from our windows. It has been a part of the view since the day I moved into Oakford Court in 1992. It is a substantial tree, standing to the height of our second floor windows, which has benefitted over the years from some expert pruning, and at the present date is once again laden with beautiful red apples. It is difficult to see why anyone would want to cut it down. Perhaps this is an age when things of beauty and innocence are no longer of consequence. I sincerely hope not.
