Dear Sirs,

I understand that an application has been made under the above reference to cut down two old trees in Doughty Street, a couple of streets away from where I live, and I also understand that neighbours have not only obtained a professional survey and report on them, but that this report and survey has identified another way of dealing with the situation and in the process save these trees.

At a time when we are all being asked to plant trees and do everything we can to improve the air quality and the ecosystem in central London, I would urge you to look again at this application and try to find a compromise so that these trees can be saved.

One of the main things that the lockdowns have shown up is how important trees, gardens and parks are to people with absolutely no outside space, but who gain so much from them.

I do hope that you can find a way to consult with these neighbours and their surveyors and that a compromise can be found to save these wonderful old trees.

With best wishes,

Margaret Christian
