The effect of this application, if successful, would be to exhaust air from the building into the street (as well as to take air from the street into the building). It is critical, in my view, to explain: (1) from which areas of the building (location, size, will this air be exhausted; (2) how much air will be exhausted (volume and time per hour); and (3) arrangements for filtering this air before release. It may be a good idea for those inside the building to remove 'used' air but it may not be a good idea for passers by to be blasted with this very same 'used' air. Would not support this application without assurances that the health of passers-by will be protected.
