At that time it still had the appearance of a coach house, annex to St. John's Lodge with the addition of a glazed top floor that attached it to the main house. There was also the addition of a glaze-roofed "studio" at the rear for a sculptor who had lived there previously. Apart from these additions it was still a simple looking brick house set back and lower than the streetscape. The alterations in the 90's were unsympathetic and it will be good to see them go. The radical re think and design proposed in this application is welcome and the contrast will hopefully not detract from the St John's Lodge or No. 3 Harley Road.
