In this case, although the internal alterations and replacement windows etc. may have been shown on the approved drawings, they could probably also mostly be done without actually needing planning permission. These alterations also weren't included in the description of development which only referred to 'The erection of a single-storey glazed rear extension'.
As such, the 2002 consent hasn't been implemented as no works related to the rear extension commenced.
So overall, a new planning application would be required.
