In amongst the continual developments changing this part of north london and bringing in generic coffee shops and chains, thank goodness for the York Way Fish Bar which has been a community resource for about 35 years, in the ownership of one family. The past few years have destroyed many small family businesses, particularly food outlets, because of restrictions during the pandemic. This business has managed to hang on and continues to be a feature in the neighbourhood despite rising business rates, crippling rent rises, and a general increase in the cost of living. If this business is closed and the site developed, not only will this family have to move out of the area - where they have extended family (some who run other small local businesses) ; but yet another small business will have been crushed despite having tenaciously hung on during the time of Covid. And for what? So a developer can develop the building and presumably sell it on, adding yet another overpriced property to the locality, likely to be unaffordable to most people living in the area. It is a hub, this fish bar, and the food and the chat from the owner have always been wonderful. Let us not lose this small business.

It has grown up with my family. they are a staple of this community for what purpose a flat. There is so many around affordable take out food good customer service . An outsider trying to deprive the local community for personal gain. He is putting a family out of business and a community out of something that not only brings them joy but is affordable. Stop the madness and let them live their life you are collecting rent and business rates taxes. He has won once stop harassing the owner to give up something he has dedicated over 20 years of his life.
