Dear Sir/Madam,

I've been a resident at St Pancras Almshouses for about a year and a half. Its a lovely place to live.

I was very pleased to hear about the plans for installing solar panels on the roof. I know several historic almshouses around the country have done this already - so it is doable. Better for the environment and should save money in the long term.

I like the plans for the hall - its a neglected part of this place. It would be good to have a focus for community activities.

My only concern is the proposal to introduce underfloor heating. Is this necessary? Will the installation cause disruption for residents? - several of whom are housebound and quite vulnerable. I understand that many of the flats had new radiators installed quite recently and people like these. Would it not be possible for the solar panels to be connected to these - rather than rip them out and put in underfloor heating.

Thank you.
